What is Telehealth?

Telehealth, also known as virtual health or Mobile Health, uses remote service technologies to offer affordable, accessible care for patients outside the office or hospital.

How does Telehealth work?

Video technologies enable patients to have comprehensive virtual access to their doctors, more than a telephone call ever can. Devices are used to monitor and record patient's vitals to let providers see the most accurate and up-to-date data at any time. Telehealth delivers real time care to you from home.

What else can it do?

Telehealth is more than just remote clinical care. It can also be used for:

- Home monitoring
- Addiction support
- Medical education
